

sourceCREATOR™ works by converting your code snippets (which you must tag as required) into "binary snippets" or "binary templates" known as components. When executed, these binary components are mixed and merged automatically to emit and modify the desired text/code files. So you can develop your own library of components and plug and play them as you need to make your applications; or you can send these binaries to your customers/users who may need access to code.